This two story blurb is a greatly abbreviated form of a book I had intended to have ready for Christmas of 2014 but as happens oh so many times, Life happened and for many reasons, the book never got finished. It will be done later in 2015, I promise!

Things have been so less than good that I was actually quite depressed over the chain of events that made up 2014. With Christmas of '14 almost upon us, I went back into my "Christmas story" folder and found these two stories. There are several more but these two made me feel the best and right now, I most certainly wanted to feel my best.

These two stories are true. The first one was just a pleasant childhood memory that recalled better days and memories but the second one is just as true as the first. As you read the "A Christmas Miracle - Keep Your Eyes Open!," the second story, you'll better understand why I stress that this story is true, just as it was written. It asks for your faith in miracles and maybe, just maybe, your faith in a kind and loving God.

PS: Shameless plug. I have a book, "Things My Father Taught Me - Lessons In Life" available on Amazon as a paperback and a Kindle download and I am just days away from having another book written about my 2014 crisis ready to go as a Kindle version before Christmas and my good friends at Book Locker (booklocker.com) will have the paperback out by the end of 2014. It is titled, "The Struggle Within" and deals with depression and suicide. Check them out please!

Thank you!
