The Great Sahara: Wanderings South of the Atlas Mountains (Cambridge Library Collection - African Studies) Henry Baker Tristram

After sailing on a crowded steamer from Marseilles, Henry Baker Tristram (1822-1906) arrived in Algiers in the winter of 1856, and began preparations for an expedition into the Sahara. Although the northern areas had been well documented by the occupying French forces, the south was little travelled by Europeans. A keen naturalist and later a Fellow of the Linnaean Society, Tristram made meticulous preparations for collecting specimens, and kept a thorough journal as he travelled. This book, one of the first English reports of the South Sahara, published in 1860, is an almost exact transcription of that journal. Travelling with a tin of chocolate and a collection of fine silk handkerchiefs to trade, Tristram made notes on a host of topics, from the flight of flamingos to the government and customs of the native Touareg. His account is still a valuable resource for students of the history of science.

Allen Yopp:

As a student exactly feel bored to help reading. If their teacher requested them to go to the library or even make summary for some guide, they are complained. Just minor students that has reading's spirit or real their hobby. They just do what the professor want, like asked to the library. They go to right now there but nothing reading significantly. Any students feel that reading through is not important, boring as well as can't see colorful pics on there. Yeah, it is for being complicated. Book is very important for you personally. As we know that on this age, many ways to get whatever you want. Likewise word says, ways to reach Chinese's country. Therefore this The Great Sahara: Wanderings South of the Atlas Mountains (Cambridge Library Collection - African Studies) can make you truly feel more interested to read.
