“Cowtown” – Fort Worth, Texas 1896

Were Caitrin Lonigan a less pragmatic woman she might look at her past losses and weep. Many would. Those losses, however, have made her the strong, resourceful, and tenacious woman she is and have encouraged her to take this leap of faith with determination ... and maybe even a measure of hope for what the future holds. She does, after all, have a solid, respectable suitor on the line and a new-found family to raise. She’s been dealt much poorer odds and survived to tell about it.

McKain Travers is a master gambler, a vagabond of sorts, handsome to a fault, and charming as the devil. Absolutely nothing in his jaded past has prepared him to raise a family, but that’s exactly what he plans to do. He has money in the bank, time on his hands, and a solid determination to see his late brother's children raised by family. It doesn't matter that he has little to recommend him for the job. He'll do whatever it takes to convince Judge Hampton to award him legal custody of Meggie and Bryan.

It’s a perfect set up for failure on a grand scale as these two can agree on virtually nothing. Love, however, sometimes takes us by surprise, seeing past foolish prejudices and overcoming jaded pride.
